Dear David,

I have looked at your application and wanted to point out the eligibility criteria for the scheme. In particular, care settings that are not eligible for Redress Scheme:

Kinship care

The scheme does not cover arrangements where a child lived with their family or extended family. This includes kinship care arrangements – even if the family were unknown to the child before the placement.

However, you should consider the full eligibility criteria in the statutory guidance, and if you feel you may be eligible, you can choose to submit an application. If you do, Redress Scotland will decide on your eligibility and make any decisions about your application.

I appreciate how disappointing it will be for you that kinship care is possibly excluded under the redress scheme. Whilst the abuse of children in all circumstances and settings is wrong, the exclusion of kinship care is in keeping with the core purpose of the scheme, which is primarily for those vulnerable children who were in long-term care, often isolated with limited or no contact with their families.

Once you have fully considered the eligibility criteria, please contact me to confirm if you are choosing to continue with your application. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions or want to discuss this further.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions or want to discuss this further.
