the Barr children. [redacted] them had recently

James [redacted] was quiet, rather pale with pink patches under his eyes. Since the impression he didn't sleep too well. Waited and listened to others speak before he made his contribution to the conversation. Impressed as a child who would rather wait in the background but took an interest in everything that was said and done around him. He had a particular type of appeal, one felt like taking him on knee and cuddling him.
Alison was the chatter box was nervous and interested in everything. As she spoke she lifted a foot backwards and up in a swinging motion.
Typical girl's movement, experimenting with movement, an active attractive child, dark curly

She told me that [redacted] children were returning from Glasgow on 30/12/74, so the Barr children could be brought up on that date to Glasgow to spend the day with their grandmother & grandfather.

She told me she would contact me if she needed any help with transport.

She also seemed keen for the children to stay in Glasgow for the weekend and I said we could do this after we saw how the day outing went.

The assn. nation was full of praises for Mrs Barr for the way in which she had kept in regular contact with the children. Apparently the children are very settled at Kames Castle and pose no particular problems. I told her I would like to meet the children soon, perhaps when they were coming to Glasgow for a visit.
