At around 7 years old, I remember being taken away from my family and placed in Nazareth House. This was my first experience of care. It was run by nuns, and I was only a young child. I would wet the bed, and instead of being comforted, I was punished. The nuns would slap me, make me stand in the corner of the room, and force me into cold baths, which was humiliating and frightening. They would take all my privileges away from me so I had nothing at all.

The abuse in Nazareth House was physical and constant. The nuns, who were quite old, would belt me across the face and hit me on the head with their hands. Most nights I went to bed hungry; they were not bothered whether I was fed or not. My pocket money was taken, and we were locked in our rooms. The physical punishment happened every day, and the mental abuse was just as damaging. I was there for around six months.

I was then moved to Cardross Care Home in Dunbartonshire, where I stayed for around nine months to nearly a year. This is where the abuse became much worse. The staff were bullies and targeted me constantly. They would make me sit in a room all day in just my boxer shorts, alone and in the cold. They would punch and slap us, and they were cruel and nasty. They would pick at us, prod us, and watch us in the showers, which was deeply distressing. The mental abuse in Cardross was severe.

I was battered and bullied daily. Staff would deliberately turn the other children against each other, isolating us even more. We were made to stay in our rooms most of the time and were never given any real freedom or normal childhood experiences. I was constantly told I was an unwanted child, and at such a young age this destroyed my sense of self-worth. I was around 8 to 9 years old, and I began running away from these places because I could not cope.
