During my time in this home, I suffered severe bullying that shook me to my core and left me feeling utterly broken. Within just a few days of arriving, it became painfully clear that this was not a safe place for me — it was a place that would cause me damage I still carry with me today. The staff, the very people who were supposed to protect me, nurture me, and make me feel valued, instead chose to regularly abuse me, both physically and mentally. I was not just let down by them — I was actively hurt by them. On one occasion, a member of staff threw me and violently banged my head against a unit. In that moment, I felt completely powerless — frightened, humiliated, and utterly alone. I was also hit with shoes by staff and physically restrained, and each time it happened, a little more of my trust in the adults around me was destroyed.

What made it even harder to bear was that the other children in the home bullied me constantly. I had no friends, no safe space, and nobody to turn to. I was surrounded by people and yet I have never felt more alone in my life. There was one incident that has stayed with me and still fills me with a deep sense of injustice. I was accused of bullying someone at a different school — a school I wasn't even at. Despite there being no truth to it whatsoever, I was punished in a way that felt truly cruel. I was starved and had my pocket money taken away. This was not an isolated incident either — it happened regularly, and every time it did, I was reminded that my voice didn't matter, that I wouldn't be believed, and that I simply wasn't worth being treated fairly. The pain from this home did not exist on its own. It piled on top of a lifetime of hurt — because for as long as I can remember, I have been bullied and mistreated, not just in care, but throughout my whole life. The years of torment, the loneliness, the feeling that no matter where I went I was never safe and never wanted — it all became too much. I reached a point of such unbearable darkness that I attempted to take my own life. That is not something I write lightly. It is the reality of what these experiences reduced me to, and it reflects just how deeply and devastatingly they affected me — not just in those moments, but in every part of who I am and how I see myself to this day.
