You can do this in any order that makes sense to you.

There are pages for 4 care settings included in this form. If you need more copies, you can:

Please remember:

- there are no wrong answers - if Redress Scotland needs more or different information, your case worker will get in touch with you and let you know
- do not worry about your spelling
- use as much or as little space as you need to give your information - you can continue on additional pages if you want to

When I was placed into St Francis at seven years old, I still had this small hope that maybe, finally, I would be somewhere safe. Instead, it became another place where I learned how powerless a child can feel when the adults in charge refuse to care. We were made to go to midnight mass, and if you didn't go, they would drag you out of bed anyway. It didn't matter if you were exhausted, scared, or simply didn't understand why. Their rules weren't about guidance—they were about control.

Even basic things like showering weren't private. Staff would stand and watch, as if our dignity didn't matter. I remember one time when I had terrible stomach pains. I kept telling them something was wrong, but no one listened. They brushed me off, ignored me, acted like I was being dramatic. I collapsed because the pain became too much, and only then did they take me to the hospital. It turned out I had appendicitis. That moment stays with me—not just the fear, but the realisation that my wellbeing meant nothing to them unless it became impossible to ignore.

They would neglect us, skip feeding us, and lock us in cupboards on our own. Those cupboards were dark, cold, and silent except for your own breathing. It was their way of reminding us that they had all the power. Looking back, I can see how wrong it all was, but at the time, it just felt like another part of surviving.

When I went to Carline House, I hoped things might be different, but it was just like a mad house. The chaos wasn't loud—it was in the way the staff behaved, the way they treated us like numbers instead of people. Certain staff wouldn't even let you use butter or make a tea or coffee, as if those tiny comforts were privileges we hadn't earned. They acted like they were above everyone else, like we were beneath them simply because we were children in care.

Food was barely given out, and when it was, it felt like they were doing us a favour rather than meeting a basic need. We were constantly hungry, constantly anxious, constantly trying to figure out how to stay out of trouble in a place where trouble didn't even need a reason. All of us wanted to run away from the madness, from the feeling of being trapped in a place that was supposed to protect us but instead made us feel smaller every day.

Those experiences shaped me, but they didn't break me. I survived them, even when the people responsible for my safety failed me completely. And telling this story now is part of reclaiming what they tried to take.
