I was around 12 years old when I was taken from home. I felt extremely emotional and scared. My mum was heartbroken, and none of us were expecting this to happen. It came as a complete shock. I remember being dragged out of my bed by a social worker. I was confused, frightened, and didn't understand what was going on. I was then taken to Cardross while I was still heartbroken and overwhelmed with emotion. That experience of being taken so suddenly and forcefully has stayed with me ever since and has had a lasting impact on how I feel about safety and trust.

On arrival, there was no empathy shown towards me by the care home staff. There was no understanding, no comfort, and no explanation as to why I was there. I felt completely alone, confused, and abandoned. After a few days, I realised that I was not getting out of there. When that reality set in, I felt like I was in hell. I felt trapped, hopeless, and powerless, with no control over what was happening to me.

While I was there, we were allowed and made to have sex with other young girls our own age. The night shift staff would make this happen and would wait, and after this they would go in and sexually assault the girls. This was deeply traumatic and completely inappropriate, and it has had a severe and lasting effect on me. The staff were extremely violent and feral in their behaviour. They would beat me black and blue regularly. Every time I tried to stand up for myself or rebel, they would take me outside and beat me. They would punch and kick me repeatedly.

They would also come into my bedroom and beat me there. I was punched, kicked, and dragged around the room, left defenceless and terrified. This happened regularly, and I was constantly living in fear. There was also a lot of fighting between the children, and the staff allowed this to happen, which made the environment even more dangerous and unstable. This constant exposure to violence had a serious impact on my mental health and how I developed as a young person.

The food they provided was cold, rotten, and hard. They knew we wouldn't like it, but we were given no other option. We were basically force-fed because if we didn't eat it, we got nothing else. This made me feel completely dehumanised and powerless.

They would restrain us in very painful ways, often without reason. They also segregated us from everyone else, isolating us for long periods. During the night, they would come in and beat us. We were treated like human punch bags. I was often secluded and locked in my bedroom for long periods during the day. There was no proper education provided. Because of this, I had to repeat my second year of school. This has had a lasting impact on my education, my confidence, and my opportunities in life, and it is something that has followed me into adulthood.

Every morning, the staff would drag us into cold showers and stand there watching us shower. This was extremely degrading, humiliating, and distressing. I also witnessed girls being sexually assaulted by a staff member while I was there. These are things that no child should ever have to witness, and they have stayed with me ever since.

Over the years, I have tried to block out as much of this as I can, but there are things I will never forget. The trauma I experienced has had a very serious and long-lasting impact on my life. From a young age, I turned to alcohol to try and cope and block out what I had been through. I became an alcoholic as a result of these experiences. Although I am now in recovery, the damage caused by what happened to me remains.
