When I was placed in those young offenders institutes, I was just a child — and I was beaten. Not once, but again and again, by the hands of the very people who were supposed to protect me. I watched, terrified, as other children around me were subjected to the same cruelty. Children. We were just children.

I was physically restrained in ways that left marks on my body — injuries that served as a painful reminder of how powerless I truly was. And as if that wasn't enough, I was injected in my buttocks with a needle, drugged into submission, because that was how they chose to silence a frightened child who had no voice and no one fighting in their corner.

What happened to me in those places broke something inside of me that I have never been able to fully piece back together. I carried that pain with me when I walked out of those walls, and I carry it still. Every single day of my adult life, I battle anxiety and mental health struggles that stem from what was done to me.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

I live with PTSD that claws its way to the surface without warning, dragging me back to the darkest moments of my childhood when I felt utterly alone and completely at the mercy of those who abused their power.

There have been moments in my life where I didn't want to go on anymore.

Moments where the weight of everything I endured became so unbearable that I turned the pain on myself, because I didn't know how else to survive it. All of this — every scar, every sleepless night, every moment of despair — traces back to the trauma that was inflicted on me as a child, in a place that should have offered care but instead caused devastating, lasting harm.
