When I was two years old, my mother left my brother and me, and we were taken into the care of social services. We were placed with my grandmother, who lived with my grandfather and my two uncles. From the moment we arrived there, I never felt safe. Even in my own bedroom, where a child should feel secure, I never felt protected. My grandmother drank heavily, particularly at weekends, and that was when things became even worse. Our basic needs were neglected, and our wellbeing was never a priority. I remember being told that we would never be listened to because we were not really theirs. Those words stayed with me and made me feel as though no one would ever care about what happened to us. Whilst we were living there, I felt responsible for looking after my younger brother. I wanted to protect him from everything that was happening around us. Looking back now, I know I was only a child myself and should never have been placed in that position. Even today, I still carry feelings of guilt and often feel as though I did not do enough to protect him, despite knowing that the responsibility should never have been mine.

There were always people coming and going in the house, and whenever my brother and I were left alone with my uncle, he took advantage of that. He would come into my room, leave adult magazines for me, and make me read them. To this day, I still do not understand why he did this. Over time, his behaviour became even worse. He began sexually assaulting both my brother and me. He would touch us and make us do things to him that we did not want to do, and if we refused, he would become aggressive. We were frightened of the consequences, so we felt we had no choice but to do what he told us. Throughout my time there, I never felt cared for or protected. I was neglected and never felt safe. I was made to feel like I was a liar and that nobody had the time or willingness to listen to me. Instead of being believed and protected, I was left feeling completely alone. My experiences during this time have had a lifelong impact on me. I suffer from severe anxiety and struggle with anger issues. I find it very difficult to build close relationships because I constantly over analyse other people's behaviour and worry about how they will react to anything I say or do. The fear, neglect and lack of safety I experienced as a child continue to affect my daily life.

Whilst we were in foster care, we were under the responsibility of social services. We were placed there without, in my view, any proper thought or assessment as to whether it was a safe environment for us. Social workers would visit from time to time, but they only ever spoke to my grandmother. They never checked on my brother or me to see if we were safe, happy or being cared for. They only listened to what my grandmother had to say. Before their visits, my grandmother would make sure we were cleaned up and looked presentable. We would then be told to stay in our rooms while she spoke with the social workers. We were never given the opportunity to speak to them ourselves or tell them what was happening behind closed doors. I felt completely abandoned by the very people who were supposed to protect me and make sure I was safe. Looking back now, I believe that if we had been given the chance to speak privately to a social worker, things may have been different. At the time, I was terrified to say anything because I feared the consequences. I had also been repeatedly told that I was a liar and had grown up believing that no one would listen to me anyway. Despite that, we were never even given the opportunity to speak. No one ever questioned why we were kept away during the visits or considered that there might be a reason we were not allowed to see the social workers alone.
