I was placed into Alex Higginson's foster care, and from the beginning, things were not right. What should have been a safe place quickly became somewhere I feared. The people who were supposed to look after me treated me in ways no child should ever experience.

One of the things I remember most clearly was how they would put salt in my juice and force me to drink it. I didn't understand why they did it. It made me feel sick, and I would sometimes gag trying to swallow it, but they wouldn't let me refuse. It felt like they were doing it just to see me struggle.

Because I have ADHD, I was naturally very active and energetic. Instead of trying to understand me or help me manage it, they treated it as something to punish. I spent most of my time shut away in my bedroom, isolated from everything. It wasn't a place of comfort—it felt more like a cell. I was constantly on edge, never knowing what I might be punished for next.

The punishments were harsh and often violent. If I did something they didn't like, I would be hit. There was no patience, no explanation—just anger. I was covered in bruises most of the time. My body ached constantly, and I learned to stay as quiet and invisible as possible just to avoid attention.

During my time there, I suffered serious injuries. I had nine knuckles broken, along with many other injuries that were never properly treated. The pain was intense, but what hurt even more was knowing that no one seemed to care. It felt like I didn't matter, like I was just something to control rather than a child who needed care and protection.

Things got so bad at one point that my brother ran away. That moment has stayed with me. It showed just how desperate things had become for both of us. Instead of feeling safe together, we were both trying to escape in whatever way we could.

Living there meant constantly being afraid. Afraid of doing the wrong thing, afraid of being noticed, afraid of what might happen next. I didn't feel like I had a voice, and even if I had tried to speak up, I don't know if anyone would have listened.

Looking back, I realise that what happened wasn't right. Children in foster care are supposed to be protected, supported, and cared for. Instead, I experienced fear, pain, and neglect. It has stayed with me, shaping how I see the world and how I understand trust.

No child should ever have to go through what I went through.
