During my time at Oakbank, things were awful. If I got into even a little bit of trouble, they would lock me in a room and refuse to let me out. It was a horrible feeling. I remember being so scared, sitting there alone, not knowing when the door would open again. I felt trapped and helpless, and at times I genuinely didn't feel like I would ever get out. That fear stayed with me constantly.

The staff would beat me up all the time. They would shout at me and claim they were "restraining" me, but it wasn't restraint — they would hit me, knee me, slap me, and handle me roughly. This wasn't a one off incident. It happened repeatedly, over and over again, for the majority of the year that I was there. Every time it happened, it chipped away at my sense of safety and made me feel smaller and more afraid. I learned to expect violence, and that is something no child should ever have to feel.

The emotional impact of all of this has been huge. The fear, the isolation, the shouting, and the physical abuse have stayed with me long after leaving Oakbank. It has had a big effect on my mental health in later years. I struggled so much that I attempted suicide a few times, and the trauma from that place became something that followed me into adulthood. It made me feel like I was a danger to myself, and it damaged my mental wellbeing in ways I am still trying to understand and recover from.

What happened to me at Oakbank wasn't just a difficult period — it shaped the way I saw myself and the world. The neglect, the violence, and the constant fear left deep emotional scars. Even now, the memories affect me, and I am still dealing with the long term impact of what I went through.
