You can do this in any order that makes sense to you.

During my time there, things were awful from the very beginning. When I first arrived, I was made to sleep on a mattress on the floor. I wasn't given any clothes, toiletries, or anything that would have helped me feel even slightly settled or cared for. I felt completely stripped of dignity from the moment I walked in. I was only young, and instead of being supported, I was treated like I didn't matter.

I used to wet the bed at that age, and instead of helping me or reassuring me, the staff would tease me and laugh at me. Their reactions made me feel ashamed and embarrassed about something I couldn't control. It added to the feeling that I was being singled out and picked on for things that weren't my fault.

There were quite a few times when the staff claimed they were "restraining" me, but in reality they were beating me up and throwing me around. I remember the fear and confusion I felt, not understanding why adults were treating me this way. The physical force they used was unnecessary and frightening, and it left me feeling unsafe in a place where I should have been protected.

They also made me skip meals on several occasions. One time, when I had tonsillitis, I was left to starve for days. I was already unwell, and being denied food made everything feel even worse. I felt weak, scared, and completely neglected. It was as if my wellbeing didn't matter to them at all.

All of this had a huge impact on my mental health. I was so distressed and overwhelmed by the way I was treated that I ran away multiple times. I was desperate to escape the constant fear and humiliation. My mental state became so unstable that at one point I even set fire to one of the buildings. That shows just how much the situation had pushed me beyond my limits and how deeply I was struggling.

Looking back, the neglect, the physical abuse, the emotional cruelty, and the lack of care have stayed with me. The experience has had a lasting effect on my mental health, and it is something I am still trying to cope with today.
