I used to have stay here on weekends. They said if I had misbehaved in school then I would have to stay there but most weekends I would end up here even if I've not done anything wrong.

During my time there, I was physically abused on a regular basis. Staff would hit me, punch me, and kick me, and they often laughed while doing it, as if hurting me was something amusing. It made me feel completely powerless and humiliated. I also witnessed a lot of terrible things happening to other boys who were staying there full-time. Seeing my friends go through the same kind of abuse made everything feel even more frightening, because it showed that none of us were safe and there was no one looking out for us.

There were times when they would lock me in my room overnight simply because they felt like it. I would be shut away while everyone else was allowed to play, talk, and move around freely. Being locked in like that made me feel singled out and punished for no reason. It created a deep sense of loneliness and confusion, and I never understood why I was treated differently. It felt like I was being deliberately separated from everyone else, as if I didn't deserve the same basic freedom or kindness.

All of this made me feel completely ostracised. I had nobody I could turn to, and nowhere I felt safe enough to report what was happening. I knew that if I tried to speak up, the abuse would only get worse. That fear kept me silent, and carrying that silence as a child was incredibly heavy. I felt trapped in a situation where the people who were supposed to protect me were the ones causing the harm.

The impact on my mental health was huge. The constant fear, the isolation, and the physical abuse stayed with me long after I left. It affected how I saw myself and how I related to other people. I struggled with trust, with feeling safe, and with believing that adults could be kind or supportive. Those experiences shaped my behaviour and my emotional wellbeing for years. Even now, I can still feel the effects of what happened there, and I continue to work through the damage it caused.
