When I first went into this care home, I was only there for one month, but that month felt incredibly long and painful. From the very beginning, it was awful. I was used to being slapped, given Chinese burns, and tripped up. There was one member of staff in particular who would put his foot out to trip me whenever he felt like it. He was huge compared to me, and I always felt intimidated by him. If I hadn't completed certain tasks the way he wanted, he would do it even more. He would twist my ears, and every time it happened, I felt small, powerless, and scared.

The same man also behaved inappropriately with some of the other children, and I witnessed this. Even though I was young, I knew it was wrong. Seeing that made me feel even more unsafe, because it showed me just how little protection any of us had in that place.

If I wet the bed, I was punished. I wasn't allowed to change it, and I had to sleep on the rubber mattress. It was humiliating and uncomfortable, and it made me dread going to sleep. There were potties full of urine and faeces, and they would make us empty them. Sometimes, after we did it, they would elbow us, and the contents would spill all over us. It was degrading, and it made me feel like I wasn't seen as a child at all, but as someone they could treat however they wanted.

Looking back, I realise how deeply these experiences affected me. I was only there for a month, but the fear, the humiliation, and the constant mistreatment left a lasting impact. I remember feeling completely alone, with no one to protect me or listen to me. Every day felt like something I had to survive rather than live through.

These memories have stayed with me throughout my life. They shaped the way I see myself and the world around me. Speaking about it now is difficult, but it is also a way of acknowledging what happened and recognising the strength it took to get through it, even as a child.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

When I was in this home, I felt like I had no choice but to try to better myself, because everything there was based on pressure and fear. We were forced to run every day, and I struggled badly because I had asthma. It didn't matter how much I was gasping for breath or how much pain I was in—they didn't care. Instead of helping me, I was slapped and kicked up the backside for not keeping up. The verbal abuse was constant, and the physical abuse came whenever they decided I wasn't "good enough." Even when I was struggling to breathe, they would poke me in the chest, slap me, and kick me. It felt like I was being trained like a soldier rather than cared for as a child.

We had to hand polish the floors using a massive weight. I could barely lift it because it was so heavy, and every time I struggled, the staff and even some of the residents would laugh and mock me. It made me feel weak, embarrassed, and completely alone. I wasn't allowed to get close to anyone. If I was in the yard, I wasn't allowed to talk to anyone, and I was too scared to even try because I knew I could be put "on report." Being put on report meant being sent to the cellars, and the fear of that kept me silent.

I did go down there once to take food, and I saw children lying on the floor with nothing but cardboard as a mattress. That image has stayed with me. It showed me just how harsh and uncaring the environment really was. When I finally left, I remember being told on the way to the station that if I put my fingers up at them, they would bring me straight back. Even after I left, the impact stayed with me. For a while, I found myself marching in public without even realising it, as if my body was still stuck in their routines. It took time before I could stop doing it.

Looking back, that place changed me in ways I didn't understand at the time. The fear, the humiliation, and the constant pressure left a mark that I still feel today. Speaking about it now helps me acknowledge what I went through and how deeply it affected me.
