When I arrived at St John's, I had just come from England and still had an accent. The boys there relentlessly bullied me for it, and honestly, the staff were not much better. I faced regular bullying, which the staff were aware of; some would intervene, but others participated in the bullying as well. I experienced physical violence from the staff on several occasions. They would excessively and painfully restrain me while laughing and calling me names. There were times when I was denied dinner, locked in my room, and left to go hungry. I also witnessed staff being physically violent towards other boys, which happened quite often. Every day felt like I was on edge. There were many instances where I ran away from St John's. I struggled with the bullying due to my accent and felt out of place. I would try to escape and make my way back down south. The police would often collect me and return me, or staff from the home would come to get me back. There was a staff member who worked nights, and he would come into my room during his checks. He made sexual advances towards me, but I always made it uncomfortable enough with my reactions to his hand gestures or when he sat on my bed, so it never escalated. I knew he did this with other boys, and it did go further, although I never saw it happen; I could hear it. I can't recall his name, but he was an older man who rode his bike to the home. I didn't receive many visits from my family. Weekend leave was typically based on behavior, but due to my mother's struggles with alcohol, it rarely happened. As a result, I never got to see my siblings, and no arrangements were made for me to have contact with them.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

At St Mary's, I would say the situation wasn't as severe as at St John's, but the restraint was still excessive. I was only 13, and there could be four or five grown men on top of me at once. They would painfully twist my wrists up my back, and by the end, I felt completely violated. Sometimes, I would push back so hard that the blood vessels in my face would burst. My experiences in care certainly affected my mental health after I left. I had a lot of anger and turned to drinking for a while. It impacted my relationships and friendships throughout my life. I was separated from my siblings for all that time, which means we lost years of our childhood together. I suffered from nightmares for most of my 20s, and as I reflect on my life, I find myself looking back at my time there after trying to suppress those memories for years
