During my time at the assessment centre, I was only there for three months, but it felt much longer because of how awful it was. From the moment I arrived, I felt trapped. You were locked up all the time and couldn't leave. They would lock me in at all hours of the day, and I had to knock just to be let out. Even something as simple as moving from one area to another wasn't in my control. I remember being locked in the stairwell, feeling completely helpless and confused about why I was being treated that way.

The constant locking in made me feel like I was in a prison rather than a place that was supposed to assess and support me. I was young, and I didn't understand why I wasn't allowed basic freedom or why I had to rely on staff to open doors for me. It made me feel small, powerless, and scared. I remember standing there, waiting for someone to let me out, feeling like I had done something wrong even though I hadn't.

The lack of privacy was another thing that made the experience so uncomfortable. Staff used to watch us shower, and it made me feel exposed and uneasy. As a young person, having adults stand there and watch was frightening. It took away any sense of dignity I had. I remember trying to wash as quickly as possible just to get it over with, all the while feeling embarrassed and anxious. It was like there was no safe space, no moment where I could relax or feel like a normal child.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

During my time at the Priory, I stayed at the Coach House because I was only 13 years old. Even though I was young, I remember clearly how uncomfortable and unsafe I felt there. There were a few workers who behaved in ways that made me uneasy, and even at that age I could sense that something wasn't right. Their behaviour didn't feel normal or professional, and it left me feeling anxious and unsure of who I could trust.

One member of staff in particular was sexually abusing the children. At the time, I didn't fully understand everything that was happening, but I knew it was wrong. The atmosphere changed completely when this came to light. The CID became involved in the case, and seeing the police and hearing adults talk about what had happened made everything feel even more frightening. I was only a child, and suddenly I was surrounded by serious conversations, investigations, and fear. It made me feel incredibly vulnerable.

Knowing that someone who was supposed to look after us had been hurting children made me scared of everyone around me. I didn't know who was safe and who wasn't. I remember feeling constantly on edge, worried that something might happen to me or to the other children. Being so young, I didn't have the words to explain how frightened I was, but inside I felt confused, unsafe, and alone.

The whole experience left a lasting impact on me. The fear I felt at the time, the uncertainty about the adults around me, and the shock of knowing that someone in a position of trust had been abusing children all stayed with me. Even though I was only there for a short period, the emotional effect was significant. I was just 13, and instead of feeling protected, I felt exposed and scared. The involvement of CID only confirmed how serious the situation was, and that made it even harder to process as a child.

Looking back, I can still feel the fear and confusion I carried during that time. It wasn't just the events themselves — it was the feeling of being so young and having no control, no understanding, and no sense of safety. Those memories have stayed with me, and they shaped how I felt about adults and trust for a long time afterwards.
