I close my eyes and I can still see it. I can still feel it. No matter how many years have passed, no matter how hard I have tried to escape it I am still that small, terrified child. A child who had done nothing wrong. A child who deserved warmth, love and safety.

A child who instead was subjected to the most devastating, soul-destroying abuse imaginable mental abuse that tore apart my sense of self, and sexual abuse that violated me in ways that I still cannot fully find the words for.

And I was not alone in that suffering. I saw it with my own eyes. Other children innocent, defenceless, precious children suffering the same fate beside me. I heard their pain. I felt their fear. And none of us could save each other.

We were just children. We were just children, and we were failed by every single adult who should have protected us. That image those children never leaves me. It lives inside me every single day.

We were just children. We were just children, and we were failed by every single adult who should have protected us. That image those children never leaves me. It lives inside me every single day.

What Dean House did to me did not end when I walked out of those doors. It followed me home. It followed me into adulthood. It followed me into every relationship, every quiet moment, every night when sleep will not come. It has shaped every part of who I am in ways I never asked for and never deserved.

The anxiety is relentless it is a terror that lives inside my body, that rises without warning and leaves me breathless and broken. The depression is a darkness so heavy, so suffocating, that there are days I do not know how I keep going.

My mental health has been shattered not by weakness, not by chance but by what was deliberately done to me when I was vulnerable and small and completely without a voice. I grieve for the child I was. I grieve for the life I might have had. I grieve for the innocence that was taken from me before I even had the chance to understand what innocence was.

The pain of what happened at Dean House is not something I will ever fully recover from. It is something I carry silently, heavily, and every single day for the rest of my life.
