My time in that home was marked by constant suffering, and the memories of what happened there have stayed with me throughout my life. There was relentless bullying, and the daily conditions we were forced to endure were harsh and deeply uncomfortable. We were made to stand outside in the freezing cold, and we were forced to take cold showers. We had to walk miles just to attend church, and we were taken on long walks up massive hills, no matter how exhausted or unwell we were. These things weren't occasional — they were a constant part of life, and they created a daily sense of dread and exhaustion.

When it came to food, we had no choice and no voice. I was forced to eat macaroni, and even now I still struggle with it because of those experiences. If we didn't eat what was put in front of us, we simply went without. On top of that, we were made to carry out chores that should have been the responsibility of the staff — sweeping floors, washing dishes, and other domestic tasks that became routine for us. It felt like we were there to serve, not to be cared for.

The physical treatment we received was violent and completely unacceptable. We were smacked across our arms, legs, heads, and hands. If we didn't walk quickly enough or took too long with a task, we were struck. I was bruised many times because of this. I was also made to sit at the table without being allowed to move, and there were times when we were physically restrained. To be treated with that level of force as a child, by adults who were supposed to protect us, was frightening and deeply wrong.

I was a poorly child, and the school told my mum I was being sent there for a "holiday," so she agreed, not knowing what the place was really like. I was easily scared and very timid. I remember not being able to go to the toilet, and this has caused long term issues for me. When I caught chicken pox, I was forced to stand naked in the corridor with other children who were also ill, and we were all dunked together in calamine lotion. I was never hit, but a lady grabbed me by the hair and force fed me macaroni even though I protested and said I didn't like it.

Everything I experienced in that home has had a lasting effect on me. The fear, the physical pain, the isolation from my father, and the constant sense of being controlled and punished have shaped who I am and how I experience the world. These are not things I have simply moved on from. They are things I carry with me every single day, and it is important to me that they are finally heard and acknowledged. I had a fantasy of going on holiday as we were poor but was sent here, it was like hell.
