When I look back on my time in that place, the only word that comes to mind is hell. Two male members of staff were harming the boys there, and I was one of the children they targeted. I was mainly touched by these men, and even though I tried to fight them off whenever I could, resisting only made things worse. If I tried to escape or defend myself, they would beat me. I did manage to escape once, but they dragged me back, and the fear that followed stayed with me for years.

The staff restrained me often, and there were times when I was choked. The beatings were vicious and constant, and the mistreatment felt like a daily routine. It wasn't just physical pain—it was the feeling of being trapped, powerless, and completely unprotected. The impact of that time followed me into adulthood. A few years later, I ended up turning to drugs, and I spent a large part of my life in prison. Those experiences destroyed the last thirty years of my life, and I still feel the consequences every single day.

In the home, we were regularly locked in rooms. Sometimes staff would sit in the room and watch me, and other times I was left alone. But there were nights when those same men would come in and touch me. The women who worked there were kind, but the two men caused so much harm, and all the staff knew what was happening. Despite that, nothing changed. We were regularly starved, and I never felt any sense of peace while I was there.

I was hit with pieces of wood, kitchen utensils, and whatever else they chose to use. At the time, I was very skinny and had no strength to fight back. They were too strong, and I felt completely powerless. The staff tried to isolate us, and there were so many places in the building where they could corner us. I would try to avoid showering when those two men were on duty because I was scared of what might happen. They also behaved inappropriately with each other, which only added to the fear and confusion I felt.

These experiences have stayed with me throughout my life. They shaped who I became, the choices I made, and the struggles I've carried. Speaking about it now is painful, but it is also a way of finally acknowledging what happened and the lasting impact it has had on me.
