My first memory was being in the room where my dad was offered to take me in and he refused, saying no, that he has a new family. This rejection devastated me. I was then placed in Hallow Glen, Shettleston Assessment Centre, where I never received any understanding of what had happened to me, no guidance, and no sympathy. I felt completely lost and upset as I was told daily that my family didn't want me and to shut up. I was just a young boy missing my mum, desperate for someone to tell me it would be okay, but no one did.

I never understood what suicidal meant back then, but thinking back now, I realize I truly was. The pain was so unbearable that I barricaded myself in my room and attempted to take my own life. They took me to the police station and then moved me to Monrief Garfield Children's Home on Hath Road for around 6 months.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

At Monrief Garfield, no one cared about me. They deliberately kept me isolated and stopped me from seeing my family, which caused me immense emotional distress. The staff turned the other children against me, creating a hostile environment where I was constantly bullied. Both the staff and children would repeatedly tell me that I was unwanted and that my family didn't want me. The staff would laugh at my pain, which filled me with rage and deep hurt.

I tried to run away as often as I could to escape this abuse, but they punished me by taking all of my footwear and forcing me to walk around barefoot so I couldn't run away. They told me this is how I would learn. I was faced with an impossible choice: try to run or endure the constant bullying and humiliation. The psychological torment became unbearable.
