I was supposed to be safe. That's what child care homes are meant to be—safe places for children who have nowhere else to go. But I wasn't safe. Not even close.

The staff members—the very people entrusted to protect me—they hurt me. They physically assaulted me. They sexually assaulted me. And when I close my eyes at night, I'm back there.

I'm that terrified child again, and I can't escape.

The abuse didn't end when I walked out of those doors. It followed me. It lives in my bones, in my nightmares, in the way my heart races when I hear certain sounds or see certain faces. My mind is shattered. Mental health issues that make some days impossible to bear.

PTSD that ambushes me without warning—suddenly I'm small again, powerless again, hurting again. Anxiety that suffocates me, that makes me feel like I'm still trapped in those rooms with no way out.

Mr. Perry was the house master. I should have been able to look to him for safety, for guidance, for kindness. Instead, his name makes my stomach turn. He inflicted physical abuse on me—on all of us kids who were already broken, already abandoned by the world.

And the sexual abuse... God, I was just a child. He violated us. He destroyed something inside of us that we can never get back. Our innocence. Our trust. Our right to feel safe in our own skin.

But it wasn't just Mr. Perry. For years and years, I endured physical assaults from staff members. Different faces, same cruelty. They beat me. They hurt me. Over and over and over again. I lost count of how many times. I lost track of how many tears I cried into my pillow, how many times I begged silently for it to stop, how many mornings I woke up wondering if today would be the day someone finally saw what was happening and saved me.

No one saved me.

I had to save myself. And I'm still trying.

Every day is a battle with the memories they burned into me. Every relationship I try to build is shadowed by the trust they shattered. Every moment of peace is interrupted by flashbacks of their hands on me, their violence, their abuse.

I was a child. I deserved love. I deserved protection. I deserved to feel safe.

Instead, they gave me trauma that will haunt me for the rest of my life.

But I'm still here. Still breathing. Still fighting to reclaim what they tried to take from me.

This is my truth. This is what they did to me.

And I will not be silent anymore.
