I came into this placement genuinely believing I was finally moving toward safety. After living with an abusive father, I held onto the hope that being taken into care would mean protection, stability, and maybe even a chance to feel safe for the first time in my life. That hope was shattered almost immediately. What I found was not safety at all — it was a different kind of abuse, and in many ways the betrayal of that hope made it even harder to bear.

A member of staff subjected me to regular and severe physical abuse. His violence was as frightening as anything I had ever experienced. He would punch me in the ribs and in the back, leaving me bruised, sore, and terrified. But it wasn't just the punches. He would squeeze my throat until I couldn't breathe, until my face turned purple, until I was on the edge of passing out. In those moments, I genuinely didn't know if I was going to survive. When he finally let go, he would threaten me — telling me that if I ever told anyone, I would be in serious trouble. I was a child, already frightened and already damaged, and I believed him. His threats kept me silent, and that silence allowed the abuse to continue. He kicked me, punched me, and terrorised me constantly, and I carried all of it alone because I had been made too afraid to speak.

When I eventually tried to speak — when I finally found the courage to tell staff what was happening and ask for help — I wasn't believed. I wasn't supported. Instead, I was punished for trying. I was locked in a room simply for asking for help. That response, that deliberate silencing of a child in pain, is something I have never been able to make peace with. It told me clearly that my suffering wasn't something they wanted to stop — it was something they wanted to hide.

For four years, I was constantly in and out of a locked room. Sometimes I was placed in a secure unit for two weeks at a time, seeing nobody. I was completely isolated from the outside world, from other people, from any form of human warmth or connection. The only contact I had was when food was brought to me. Lying there day after day, alone with nothing but my thoughts and my pain, was a kind of suffering that is hard to describe. It wasn't just physical confinement — it slowly stripped away my sense of self, my worth, and any belief that life could ever be different.

I had come into care to escape abuse. Instead, I found more of it, in a place where I had no power to leave and nowhere else to turn. The cruelty of that has stayed with me for many years.

When the time finally came for me to leave, I was promised I could return if I needed to. I held onto that promise because it felt like the only reassurance I had. But it was a lie. When I reached out for help and tried to come back, they refused me. They wouldn't even let me collect my clothes or any of my belongings. I was left with nothing — no possessions, no home, no support, and nobody willing to help me. I ended up on the streets. I was homeless for just under a year.
