My time in this home left marks on me that I will carry for the rest of my life. What I experienced within those walls was not just neglect or mistreatment — it was a level of abuse that stripped away my childhood, my sense of safety, and my ability to trust, and the effects of it are still with me every single day. There was a man there who would single out me and other boys. He would tell us we could come to his room, but with one condition — we were not to tell anyone. I was a child. I did not fully understand what that meant at the time, but I understand now what he was doing. He was older and overweight, and he used the position he was in to gain access to us. He sexually abused me, and he did so in the presence of other boys in the room. It was not a one-off occurrence — the abuse happened regularly, repeatedly, and each time it left me feeling more powerless and more broken than before. As if that were not devastating enough, he also brought his friends into the home to abuse me and other children. From my memory, other members of staff were also involved. I was a child surrounded by adults who were supposed to protect me, and instead I was being abused by them and by the people they let through the door. The betrayal of that is something I do not have adequate words for.

The physical abuse I suffered in that home was also relentless. It happened on a regular basis, and there were times when I tried to fight back — on one occasion I tried to stop them by hitting out with a chair — but I was a child, and they were too strong for me. No matter how hard I tried to protect myself, I could not. That helplessness, that feeling of being completely overpowered and unable to defend yourself, is something that has never fully left me. The conditions in that home were deeply dehumanising in other ways too. The food was unpleasant and offered no comfort. I was restrained using a tie, which was frightening and humiliating. And on occasions I was locked in a padded room and left there overnight — completely alone, in the dark, with no way out. I would only be let out in the morning before the day staff arrived. Lying there through those nights, alone and frightened, I felt less than human. I felt forgotten.

In the midst of all of that darkness, there was one person who showed me genuine kindness — a lady named Jean Brennan. She treated me with a warmth and a care that stood in complete contrast to everything else I was experiencing. She took me to her own home and allowed me to stay with her family, and in doing so she gave me something I had almost stopped believing existed — the feeling of being safe and cared for. I will never forget Jean Brennan for as long as I live. In the darkest period of my childhood, she was a light, and that has always stayed with me.

The lasting impact of everything I endured in that home has been profound and far-reaching. My mental health has been severely and deeply affected. I suffer from nightmares on a regular basis — vivid, relentless reminders of what was done to me that follow me even into my sleep. I also experience suicidal thoughts with a regularity that frightens me, and that speaks to just how much damage was caused by what I went through. I did not choose any of this. It was done to me when I was a vulnerable child who had no power and no voice. And I carry the weight of it still.
