During my time in this home, I experienced something that has never truly left me — something that no child, under any circumstances, should ever have to go through. I was just 13 years old. A young, vulnerable girl who had already been through more than enough, who deserved safety, stability, and care. Instead, a fellow resident named Brian Ferrier made my life inside that home feel threatening and violating in a way that I still find deeply difficult to speak about. He persistently and relentlessly tried to get me to show my breasts. It was constant. It was suffocating. Every time he hounded me, I felt a shame and a fear that I did not fully have the words for at that age, but that I felt in every part of me. I was a child, and I was being made to feel unsafe in the place I was supposed to be living in.

What compounded that pain in a way that is hard to fully articulate was the response of the staff. They knew. They were aware of what was happening to me, and yet they did not do enough to stop it. They did not protect me in the way they were absolutely obligated to. I was a 13 year old girl being repeatedly harassed and made to feel violated, and the adults around me largely stood by and allowed it to continue. That failure cut deeply. Because when you are a child and the adults who are supposed to care for you do not step in to protect you, it does not just leave you feeling unsafe — it leaves you feeling worthless. It tells you, without a single word being spoken, that what is happening to you does not matter. That you do not matter. And at 13, already carrying so much, that message was devastating.

The harassment, combined with the wider mistreatment I was experiencing within that home, eventually became more than I could bear. I felt completely trapped, with no safety, no comfort, and nobody truly in my corner. In desperation, I ran away from the home on a number of occasions. I want to be clear about what that means — I was not a troublesome child acting out. I was a frightened, broken young girl who felt she had absolutely no other option. Running away was not rebellion. It was survival. It was the only way I could think of to escape a place where I did not feel safe, where I was not being protected, and where every day felt like something to simply endure rather than live.

The wounds left by what happened in that home — the harassment, the failure of the staff, the loneliness, the fear — did not disappear when I left. They followed me. They became part of a wider accumulation of pain that I have spent much of my life trying to carry, and they are a significant part of why I am sharing my story today.
