I was placed into Cannon Lodge children's home when I was young, and from the moment I arrived it felt like I'd stepped into a place where kindness simply didn't exist. The staff were supposed to look after us, but most of the time it felt like they were waiting for any excuse to lash out. I never understood why. Sometimes I'd be walking past and suddenly feel a smack across my arm or the back of my head, as if my existence alone was enough to annoy them.

If you did something they didn't like — even something small, like speaking too loudly or moving too slowly — they'd act as though you'd committed some huge offence. They'd hit, shove, or kick you without hesitation. I remember sitting in the dining room, trying to stay as quiet as possible, because if you made a noise they'd hit you with this big metal spoon they kept on the counter. It wasn't about teaching us anything. It was about control, and they knew we had nowhere else to go. There was one staff member who would punch the back of my head whenever he walked behind me. No warning, no reason. Just a sudden blow that left me stunned and afraid to even breathe. I learned to tense up whenever I heard footsteps approaching from behind. That kind of fear gets into your body and stays there. What made it worse was how little they cared about our basic needs. They were paid to look after us, but they never gave us proper clothes or shoes. I'd watch other kids at school wearing decent uniforms while I was stuck in wornout things that didn't fit. It wasn't just neglect — it was a message. We weren't worth the effort. We weren't worth anything.

The staff carried themselves like we were a burden they had to tolerate. They didn't try to hide their contempt. If you cried, they'd mock you. If you asked for help, they'd ignore you. If you tried to stand up for yourself, they'd punish you. After a while, I stopped expecting anything good to come from them. I focused on surviving each day without drawing attention to myself.

Looking back, I can see how wrong it all was. At the time, though, it felt normal because it was all I knew. But no child should ever have to live like that — afraid, uncared for, and treated like they don't matter. What happened in that place wasn't discipline or structure. It was abuse, plain and simple, and it leaves marks that don't show on the skin.
