My name is Neil Sutherland, and I was sent to Linwood Hall when I was 14 years old. I was placed there because I had been getting into trouble - being naughty and wagging school. I thought I was just being sent somewhere to sort myself out, but what happened to me there has affected my entire life. When I first arrived at Linwood Hall, there was already a carer there called David Murphy. From the very beginning, David Murphy singled me out in ways that made me deeply uncomfortable. Every single time I needed to use the bathroom, he would be there. He would come into the bathroom with me, watch me undress, and stand there watching me the entire time. I was the only one who was watched like this - none of the other boys were subjected to this treatment. It made me feel violated and humiliated, even though I don't recall him actually touching me during these times. The psychological damage of being constantly observed in such vulnerable moments was profound.

The situation became so serious that I was sent to see a psychiatrist because of what was happening to me. This should have been a clear warning sign to the authorities that something was deeply wrong, but nothing was done to protect me or stop David Murphy's behaviour.

The abuse wasn't limited to David Murphy's inappropriate supervision. The physical violence at Linwood Hall was routine and brutal. Staff members, including David Murphy, would hit me with a ruler and a large stick. They would strike me over my knuckles and on my knees. The pain was severe, and the marks would last for days. This was presented as normal discipline, but it was simply abuse.

I also suffered terribly at the hands of other students. I was physically bullied by other pupils, and rather than protecting me, the staff actively encouraged violence. There was another boy there, John McClusky from Kirkcaldy in Fife, and I remember how the staff would actually encourage people to fight each other. They seemed to enjoy watching us hurt one another. This created an atmosphere of constant fear and violence.

While David Murphy never explicitly asked me to strip off completely outside of the bathroom situations, his constant presence during my most private moments, combined with the way he singled me out for this treatment, constituted a form of sexual abuse. The way he watched me, isolated me, and made me the sole target of this invasive supervision was deeply inappropriate and has had lasting effects on my psychological wellbeing. The trauma I experienced at Linwood Hall has followed me throughout my entire life. It caused me to have no relationships at an early age - I simply couldn't trust people or form normal connections after what had been done to me. The abuse I suffered made me feel worthless and damaged. As I grew older, I became dependent on alcohol as a way to cope with the memories and the pain. The drinking became a way to numb myself to what had happened, but it only created more problems in my life.

I was sent to Linwood Hall as a troubled teenager who needed guidance and support. Instead, I was subjected to sexual abuse, physical violence, and psychological trauma that has shaped the rest of my life. The people who were supposed to care for me and help me instead damaged me in ways that I am still dealing with today. I deserve to have my story heard and acknowledged.
