I spent part of my childhood in Creagdhù Children's Home on Drive, Pollokshields, and those years left marks on me that I'm still trying to understand. Every day felt like a battle I never asked to fight. The staff who were supposed to care for me were the same people who bullied me. They shouted at me, insulted me, and treated me like I didn't matter. Sometimes they hit me or threw things at me for no reason at all. I was just a child, confused and scared, trying to make sense of why the adults around me seemed to hate me so much. There were days when the fear and humiliation became too much, and I would run away. I didn't know where I was going; I just knew I needed to get away from the people who were hurting me. Looking back, it breaks my heart that a child felt safer running into the unknown than staying in a place meant to protect them. None of what happened to me should ever have happened to any child.

When I was moved to Maxton on Baltic Street in Bridgeton, Glasgow, I hoped things would get better. I was thirteen, still young enough to believe that maybe the next place would be different. Instead, it was worse. The staff there shouldn't have been anywhere near vulnerable kids. They insulted us constantly, calling us horrible names that stuck in our heads. They lashed out physically, and the atmosphere in that place was heavy with fear and hopelessness.

I wasn't the only one suffering. A lot of the other kids were hurting too, and many of them turned that pain inward. Some selfharmmed. Some tried to end their lives. We were children living in an environment that crushed us instead of caring for us. We needed support, guidance, and safety, but what we got was the opposite.

For the last two years I was there, I didn't even have a social worker. There was no one checking on me, no one making sure I was safe, no one to turn to when things got unbearable. I felt abandoned by the very systems that were supposed to protect me. When I finally left the home at sixteen, I thought maybe things would change.

Instead, the council handed me the keys to a flat and walked away. No support, no guidance, no preparation for adult life. I was still a child, suddenly expected to survive on my own after years of trauma. Everything I went through should never have happened. Children deserve safety, compassion, and care. I was denied all of that, and I'm still trying to rebuild myself from the damage that was done.
