During my time there, the place was run by a governor type man, and he was extremely violent towards me. He used to slap me all the time, and he would kick and punch me whenever he felt like it. I remember feeling constantly on edge, never knowing when he might lash out. As a child, that level of unpredictability and aggression was terrifying. It made me feel unsafe every single day.

He always used to make us go into the lake to pull weeds out, even when some of us were struggling to swim. I remember the fear of being in the water, trying to keep myself afloat while also doing what he demanded. There was no concern for our safety or wellbeing. It felt like we were being pushed to our limits for no reason other than his control over us.

At night, the teacher would come into the room, and she would sexually assault me. She used to come in when she was supposedly tucking us into bed, but instead she would touch us inappropriately. I was young, confused, and scared, and I didn't understand why this was happening. Those moments left me feeling trapped and deeply ashamed, and they have stayed with me throughout my life.

It wasn't just me. Most of the boys were beaten by the staff. I saw it happen regularly. The violence was constant, and it created an environment where fear was the norm. Watching others go through the same abuse made everything feel even more hopeless. It showed me that none of us were safe, and that the adults who were supposed to protect us were the ones causing the harm.

The whole experience was horrible, and it has had such a negative impact on my life mentally. The physical violence, the sexual abuse, the fear, and the lack of safety have all stayed with me. These memories shaped the way I grew up and the way I see the world. Even now, the emotional effects are still present. What happened to me there has left lasting scars, and I am still dealing with the impact of it today.

When I first arrived, I was mostly placed with the older boys in the big house, and that's when everything became really difficult for me. The boys used to bully me constantly. They would beat me up almost every night, and this went on for around four months straight. It was horrible — honestly one of the worst periods of my life. I remember going to bed every night feeling scared, knowing what was likely to happen. What made it even worse was that the staff knew exactly what was going on, and they did nothing. Their neglect made me feel completely unprotected and alone.

Eventually, they moved me out of that home and into another dorm, and things did get better after that. But those first four months left a deep mark on me. The fear, the violence, and the lack of support from the adults who were supposed to look after us had a huge impact on me mentally.

The staff themselves used to hit me all the time. They would grab me by the neck or by the throat, and they would kick me up the bum as a way of "showing authority." I remember being pinned up against the wall, feeling completely powerless. They would say they were restraining people, but it wasn't restraint — it was violence. They would beat us up under the excuse of control. Because of this, I became scared to speak up or say anything at all. I learned very quickly that using my voice could lead to being hurt.

The staff would also verbally abuse me. They shouted at me constantly and told me I would be nothing in life. Hearing those words as a child had a really negative impact on me. It chipped away at my confidence and made me feel worthless. The combination of physical violence, bullying, and emotional abuse created a constant sense of fear and self doubt that has stayed with me into adulthood.

All of these experiences had a huge effect on my mental health. The bullying from the older boys, the neglect from staff, the physical assaults, and the verbal abuse all shaped the way I saw myself and the world around me. Even now, I still feel the emotional consequences of what I went through. It was a traumatic time, and the impact has never fully gone away.
