You can do this in any order that makes sense to you.

There are pages for 4 care settings included in this form. If you need more copies, you can:

- print additional pages from mygov.scot/redress

Please remember:

- there are no wrong answers - if Redress Scotland needs more or different information, your case worker will get in touch with you and let you know

I remember the day I was placed into Egglington, thinking it would be a place where I'd finally be safe. Instead, it became one of the darkest chapters of my life. The staff who were meant to protect me treated me with cruelty and disrespect from the moment I arrived. They spoke to me like I was a problem rather than a person, and the atmosphere quickly taught me that I couldn't trust the adults around me.

At night, things were even worse. Staff members would come into my room and sit far too close, touching me in ways that made my skin crawl. They would play with my hair as if it were normal, as if I should accept it without question. I felt trapped in my own body, unable to push them away or call for help. Sometimes they would give me medication that left me groggy and confused, making it even harder to understand what was happening or to defend myself. I learned to fear the nighttime, because I never knew what they would do or how powerless I would feel.

There were moments when they would lock me in a cupboard, leaving me alone in the dark with my thoughts racing. I would sit there wondering what I had done to deserve this, even though deep down I knew none of it was my fault. The isolation was its own kind of punishment, a way of breaking me down so I wouldn't resist.

I wasn't the only one. Aisla, who was there with me, went through the same horrors. She told me how the staff would touch her and ask for sexual favours, acting as though it was something expected, something routine. They groomed us, manipulating us with promises of money or privileges, trying to make their abuse seem like a twisted form of kindness. Hearing her experiences made me realise how systematic it all was—how many of us were being hurt behind closed doors.

Looking back, I can see how deeply this shaped me. I carried the fear, confusion, and shame for a long time, even though none of it belonged to me. What happened in Eglington was abuse, plain and simple. It should never have happened to me, to Aisla, or to anyone else. Telling this story now is a way of reclaiming my voice, piece by piece, after years of being silenced.
