During my time in foster care, I experienced neglect and abuse that has never left me. Not a day goes by where I do not carry the weight of what happened in that house.

The woman who was supposed to care for me, Jean, would not feed me properly. She herself only ate one meal a day and expected us to eat at school, as though that was sufficient. At home, the most we would ever receive was a bowl of soup or horrible frozen meat. To this day, I still suffer with stomach problems that I believe are a direct result of that time in my life. I remember telling Jean that I did not want turkey soup, and yet she forced me to eat it anyway. I was a child with no voice and no choice, and that feeling of being completely powerless in a place that was supposed to be my home is something that has never truly left me.

What happened with Bob, Jean's husband, was far worse and far more damaging. He would deliberately walk past the bathroom while I was bathing and watch me. I was a child. I felt exposed and frightened, and I did not fully understand why. He would also come into my bedroom at night, and Jean knew he did this. There came a time when I woke up believing I had wet the bed. The shame I felt in that moment was overwhelming. It was only later that I came to understand that Bob had placed something in my bed to make me think that. The fact that Jean knew what was happening and did nothing makes it even harder to process, even now.

Jean once accused me of dropping gravy on the floor and physically forced me to get down and search under the table. I was humiliated and degraded in a place where I should have felt safe. She never bought us proper clothing either. The only time anything was purchased was through vouchers, and even then, what I received were old hand-me-downs from her daughter — clothes that were around ten years out of date. I truly believe she dressed me that way deliberately, to make me feel worthless.

The trauma I carried from those years became unbearable. I turned to drugs because I desperately needed something, anything, to numb the pain and silence the memories. I am still on methadone today as a result of that. What was done to me in that house did not just steal my childhood. It followed me into my adult life, and I am still fighting the consequences of it every single day.
