During my time at Liberton Brae, it was a bad experience from start to finish. The staff used to hit me and throw me about, and this wasn't other young people doing it — it was the adults who were supposed to look after us. They would beat me up, and I saw how terrible their behaviour was. There was no care, no support, just fear. They would shout at us and call us names, and as a child, hearing that from the people in charge made me feel small and worthless.

The way they treated me has had a lasting effect on my mental health. Being spoken to like that, being hit, and being made to feel like I didn't matter has stayed with me throughout my life. I was young, and instead of being protected, I was hurt by the very people who were meant to keep me safe. That experience changed me, and the impact of it is something I still carry with me today.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

During my time at St. Katherine's, it was a horrible experience. They made me share a room with two other people, and that alone made me feel uncomfortable. I never felt like I had any privacy or space of my own. There wasn't much physical abuse during my time there, but the mental abuse was constant. The staff would call us names, bully us, and shout at us. It made me feel small and embarrassed, and over time it pushed me further into my shell.

Even though most of the abuse was emotional, there were times when they restrained me. But the way they restrained me wasn't safe or controlled — they would beat me up while doing it. They would hit me in the back and handle me roughly, and it was horrible. I remember feeling scared and powerless, not understanding why adults were treating me that way.

All of this has had a big, lasting impact on my mental health. Even now, I still suffer from the effects of what happened there. I was already a quiet child, and the way I was treated made me even more nervous and withdrawn as I grew up. The experiences stayed with me into adulthood, and I have recently been to see a counsellor because of the ongoing impact. What happened at St. Katherine's didn't just affect me at the time — it shaped how I felt about myself and the world for many years afterwards.

During my time at Wellington Farm, it was awful. It was a residential school, but it never felt like a school to me. We only went to actual lessons once a week, and the rest of the week they had us doing endless manual labour. It felt like being in a prison camp rather than a place for children. Looking back, I truly believe this set me back in my education. Instead of learning, reading, or developing skills, I was constantly working, and I don't think I ever caught up academically because of that. I often felt like I wasn't as clever as I could have been simply because my time was spent doing physical labour instead of being in a classroom.

I tried to run away from there a few times because I couldn't cope with how harsh it was. I remember one time in particular when they made me walk from Inverness all the way back to Edinburgh. I didn't want to do it. I told them I didn't want to, but I had no choice. Being forced to walk such a long distance as a young person was frightening and exhausting. It made me feel powerless, like my feelings didn't matter at all.

There were also many times when they would boot me up the bum, hit me, and abuse me. It wasn't just rough handling — it was deliberate and cruel. I remember one staff member, I think his name was Mr. McElla, who would hit us and treat us terribly. As a child, having an adult behave like that towards you leaves a deep mark. It made me feel scared, confused, and constantly on edge.

The whole experience at Wellington Farm has stayed with me. The physical abuse, the forced labour, the lack of education, and the complete disregard for our wellbeing all had a lasting impact on my life. It shaped how I saw myself and the world around me. No child should ever have been treated that way, and the memories of what happened there still affect me today.

if we didnt behave ourselves then they wouldnt feed you and make you starve for the night.
