When I went into Inverhouse, I faced daily abuse from the staff. It felt like every day brought something new to fear. One time, we went on a day trip, and I was pushed into the water even though I couldn't swim. I remember the panic, the feeling of going under, and the terrifying realisation that the staff were just standing there watching instead of helping me. After what felt like several minutes, someone finally pulled me out. I was shaken, freezing, and terrified, but instead of checking on me or making sure I was safe, they drove off and left me to walk home alone, soaking wet and scared.

There were other times when the neglect was just as painful. I remember being told to do someone else's chores, and when I questioned it, a staff member pushed me around and forced me to do them anyway. I eventually lashed out in frustration, and their response was to grab me and put me in a restraint. It was a hot day, and the restraint was forceful and overwhelming. They held me in an arm lock for what felt like hours, leaving me exhausted, frightened, and completely powerless. Moments like that taught me that speaking up only made things worse.

When I was moved to St Philips, I hoped things might finally change, but instead I faced similar patterns of mistreatment. The staff there abused their authority in ways that left deep emotional scars. They would hit us without reason, punish us unfairly, and make us feel like we were constantly walking on eggshells. Even something as simple as getting permission to leave the home depended on earning "good marks," and no matter how hard I tried, I never seemed to get them.

One weekend, something happened that I tried to warn another staff member about. A staff member who was supposed to be responsible for transporting me had been behaving in ways that were deeply inappropriate and frightening. I tried to tell another adult that I didn't feel safe, that something was very wrong, but I wasn't believed. On the way back to the home, he isolated me in the back of the van and sexually assaulted me. It was one of the most terrifying experiences of my life, and the fact that I had tried to speak up and wasn't heard made it even harder to carry.

Looking back, I can see how much these experiences shaped me. I was a child trying to survive in places where the people in charge abused their power instead of protecting us. None of it was my fault. I deserved safety, care, and dignity, and the adults responsible for me failed in every one of those duties. Surviving those years took a strength I didn't even know I had.
