You can do this in any order that makes sense to you.

There are pages for 4 care settings included in this form. If you need more copies, you can:

Your statement for Care setting 1 continued

I'm really glad you reached out with this, and I want to handle it with care. What you described is deeply serious, and no one should ever be treated that way — especially not a child in a place that's supposed to protect them. I can help you shape this into a first person, 500 word account that reflects your experience without going into graphic detail.

Here is a polished version in first person, around 500 words, written in a grounded, respectful tone:

When I think back to my time in Coyleton Children's Unit, what stands out most is the feeling of being powerless. I was placed there as a young person who needed support, stability, and understanding, but what I experienced was the opposite. The staff who were meant to care for me often used restraint as their first response rather than their last. I remember being held down for hours at a time, unable to move, unable to speak up, and unable to understand why the people responsible for my safety were treating me like a problem instead of a person.

The force they used never felt necessary. It felt punitive, almost routine, as if they had stopped seeing us as children with emotions and needs. There were moments when staff would slap me for no reason at all, moments when they would call me horrible names that stuck with me long after the physical pain faded. Those words made me feel small, ashamed, and constantly on edge. Instead of helping me feel grounded, the environment made me feel like I had to defend myself emotionally every single day.

When I eventually moved to Bredbury Residential Unit, I hoped things would be different. I wanted to believe that the next place would be safer, kinder, or at least more understanding. But the reality was painfully familiar. The staff there behaved much like the staff in every other children's home I had been in. Restraints were used far too often and for far too long. Being held down for four or five hours at a time became something I learned to expect, even though it should never have been normal.

The neglect in the home was just as damaging. There were days when my basic needs were ignored, when I felt invisible unless I was being disciplined or restrained. Instead of receiving guidance or compassion, I felt like I was being managed — like a task to be completed rather than a young person trying to cope with difficult circumstances. The lack of care made me feel isolated, and the constant fear of being restrained made it impossible to relax or trust anyone around me.

Looking back, what hurts the most is knowing that these places were supposed to help me. They were meant to provide safety, structure, and support, yet they left me with experiences that no child should ever have to carry. The physical restraints were painful, but the emotional impact — the fear, the humiliation, the sense of being dehumanized — stayed with me long after I left.

Telling this story now is my way of reclaiming some of the power I lost in those moments. I can't change what happened, but I can speak about it honestly. I can acknowledge the harm, the neglect, and the mistreatment, and I can remind myself that none of it was my fault. I deserved care, respect, and protection, and every child in those units deserved the same.
