I hated my time at St. Johns. From the beginning, I felt like I was treated differently from the other children. Staff would single me out, and there were times when they would lock me in my room so I couldn't get out, while allowing the other children to move around freely and do whatever they wanted. Being shut away like that made me feel isolated, punished, and completely powerless, even when I hadn't done anything wrong.

I was also sexually assaulted on multiple occasions. One member of staff would come into my room at night and touch my genitals. He would stand there while I was showering and watch me, making me feel exposed and terrified. At that age, I didn't fully understand why it was happening, but I knew it was wrong and deeply frightening. When I eventually spoke to some of the other boys, they told me they were being assaulted as well. Hearing that confirmed that it wasn't just me—it was something happening to others too, and it made the whole situation feel even more overwhelming and unsafe.

There was also physical abuse. Staff would hit us, and I was hit many times. They called it "restraining," but it wasn't restraint—it was violence. They would pin me down in ways that hurt, pressing their weight on me, hitting me in the ribs, and using force that had nothing to do with keeping anyone safe.

Alongside this, they would shout in my face, call me names, and verbally abuse me. The combination of physical and verbal abuse made every day feel unpredictable and frightening. I never knew what would set someone off or when I would be targeted next.

I witnessed this kind of treatment happening to other boys as well. Seeing others go through the same abuse made the environment feel even more hopeless. It wasn't just isolated incidents—it was a pattern, and it affected all of us.

All of this had a huge negative impact on my mental health. The constant fear, the abuse, and the lack of safety stayed with me long after I left St. Johns. It shaped how I saw myself and how I saw the world. Even now, the effects of what happened there still influence my thoughts, my reactions, and my ability to trust people.
