Over a period of around three to four years, I was subjected to ongoing sexual and mental abuse. Looking back, it's difficult to fully express the weight of what happened, but I want to describe it as clearly and honestly as I can. During that time, the person who abused me created situations that allowed him to isolate and control me. He would arrange camping trips for myself and a friend—someone who, I later learned, was also being abused. These trips were presented as harmless outings, something fun and adventurous, but they were carefully planned opportunities for him to separate us from anyone who could protect us.

When we were out on those trips, away from home and away from safety, he would isolate us both. The sense of being cut off from the rest of the world made it even harder to understand what was happening or to believe there was any way out. I remember feeling confused, trapped, and unsure of how to speak up. The emotional pressure he put on us was constant, and it made me feel as though I had no control over my own life.

It didn't stop with the camping trips. He also had us stay at his home, which became another place where the abuse continued. Being in his house, under his rules, made the situation feel even more overwhelming. I felt powerless, as though he had created an environment where he could do whatever he wanted without anyone noticing or questioning it. The abuse during those stays left me feeling ashamed, frightened, and deeply alone, even though my friend was going through the same thing. We were both children trying to cope with something far beyond our ability to understand.

The emotional impact of those years has stayed with me. The manipulation, the secrecy, and the fear shaped the way I saw myself and the world around me. Speaking about it now is difficult, but it's also important. This statement reflects what I went through, in the order it happened, and as truthfully as I can express it.
