I was only a child when I was placed into the children's home, but the things that happened there have stayed with me ever since. From the moment I arrived, it felt like I had stepped into a place where kindness didn't exist. The staff, especially the nuns, treated me as if I was a problem they needed to break rather than a child who needed care.

One of the worst memories I have is of mealtimes. They would force food on me that I couldn't eat, things that made me gag or cry. It didn't matter how much I struggled. If I didn't finish it, they would drag me into a small room and punish me. I remember standing there, terrified, crying so hard I could barely breathe, but they wouldn't let me leave. When they finally brought me back out, they would sit me in front of the same bowl of porridge and tell me I wasn't going anywhere until it was gone. Once, my sister stepped in and ate it for me because she couldn't stand watching what they were doing.

Night-time wasn't any safer. I was young, scared, and still learning how to cope with everything happening around me. When I wet the bed, instead of helping me or comforting me, they would lash out at me. They acted like normal childhood accidents were unforgivable sins. Every mistake, every fear, every moment of vulnerability became another excuse for them to hurt me or shout horrible things at me.

They knew I was scared of the dark, and they used it against me. If I cried, if I hesitated, if I did anything they didn't like, they would lock me in a cupboard. I remember sitting there, shaking, feeling completely alone, wondering what I had done to deserve any of it. The truth is, I hadn't done anything. I was just a child trying to survive in a place that was supposed to protect me.

The worst part wasn't even the physical pain. It was the way they made me feel—like I was worthless, like everything about me was wrong. They were supposed to care for us, but instead they made us feel small, frightened, and unwanted.

Looking back, I can still feel the weight of those days. The children's home wasn't a place of safety. It was a place where I learned how cruel adults could be, and how hard it is for a child to hold onto hope when the people meant to protect them are the ones causing the harm.
