I was only fifteen when I was placed in Woodside Children's Home in Clackmannan, and even now it's hard to explain what those months felt like. I went in expecting support, structure, maybe even a chance to settle after everything I'd already been through. Instead, I walked into a place where the people who were supposed to protect me became the ones I feared the most. From the beginning, the staff made it clear that I wasn't welcome. They singled me out, mocked me, and treated me like I didn't deserve basic respect. They would keep me shut in my room for long stretches of time, not because I'd done anything wrong, but because they could. Sometimes they hit me or shoved me around for no reason at all, and the names they called me still echo in my head. It wasn't just the physical pain—it was the humiliation of being targeted in front of other staff, as if hurting me was some kind of entertainment.

Mornings were the worst. If I didn't shower exactly when they demanded, they'd take my mattress away. I'd be left with nothing but a hard bed frame, expected to sleep like that as punishment. It made me feel less than human, like comfort was something I had to earn. I remember lying there at night, staring at the ceiling, wondering why the adults who were meant to care for me seemed determined to break me instead.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

When I was moved to Rossie Farm School in Montrose, I thought maybe things would get better. I told myself a new place meant a new start. But the pattern repeated itself, just in different ways. They locked me in my room for hours, leaving me alone with nothing to do and no one to talk to. They wouldn't let us eat in our rooms, but they also wouldn't let me out, so I'd go long stretches without food or water. It felt like I was being erased—kept out of sight, out of mind.

When I finally reached my limit and lashed out from hunger, fear, or frustration, the response was always the same: more punishment, more shouting, more names meant to make me feel small. They treated my reactions as proof that I deserved the way they handled me, when really I was just a kid trying to survive in a place that offered no safety.

Looking back, I can see how deeply those experiences shaped me. I learned to be on guard, to expect the worst, to question whether I deserved kindness. But I also know now that what happened to me was wrong. I wasn't a bad kid. I was a young person trapped in systems that failed me again and again. Telling this story doesn't erase what happened, but it reminds me that my voice matters—and that I survived something no child should ever have had to endure.
