I was just a child, and they hurt me. Week after week, the staff would hit me, and I couldn't stop them. I was small and scared and completely powerless. I witnessed other children being abused too—I can still see their faces, hear their cries—and I couldn't help them either. I couldn't even help myself.

What they did to me has broken something inside that I don't know if I'll ever fully repair. I live with PTSD, anxiety, and depression every single day. It's like carrying a wound that never quite heals, that reopens when I least expect it. They used to restrain me, pin me down, hurt me physically while I begged them to stop. The terror I felt in those moments—it's still with me. It lives in my body, in my bones.

I'm an adult now, but I still feel like that frightened child sometimes. I flinch at raised voices.

I panic when I feel trapped. I lie awake at night replaying those scenes, wondering why no one saved me. Why no one stopped them. Why I had to endure that pain alone.

The worst part is knowing that it didn't have to be this way. I deserved love. I deserved safety. I deserved to be a child without fear. Instead, the people who were supposed to protect me became the ones I feared most.

I'm trying so hard to heal, but the weight of it crushes me some days. I'm exhausted from carrying this trauma, from pretending I'm okay when I'm barely holding myself together. I want to be free of this pain, but it clings to me like a shadow I can't escape.

I needed someone to see what was happening. I needed someone to care. And no one did.
